Ben Wilbrink: Fair schooling

A largely English colonial society was established, and it evolved rather quickly from one generation of settlers to the next. Neil Gresham Students whose parents had been to higher education were less likely to have felt anxious about failing. The curriculum of the African Free School, like similar institutions established elsewhere, was dominated by Protestant religion and morality.

Education and Social Change: Themes in the History of American Schooling

Without the growth of enrollments, modern, bureaucratic school systems would not be possible. Like social change, education also is a difficult subject, even without considering its history. The impact on education depends on the character of the attitudes in question and how they are enforced by the immediate community Coleman, 1988; Portes, 1998.

Education and Social Change: Themes in the History of American Schooling

Patrick Elamine, from Frampton, recalls how homework was done in the spaces left over between the football: Where I live, it was opposite the park, and I was really into football.

That equation is inherently untestable because ability is measured and accredited according to criteria shaped in favour of the already advantaged Goldthorpe 1997. Everybody did it really, and so there was quite a lot of pride at stake.

Ben Wilbrink: Fair schooling

In general, parents were more likely to send their children to private schools if they themselves had been to private schools. Yet when we used our interview data to look beyond the aggregate statistics, the results were considerably more complicated. Even if life was difficult in colonial North America, however, it was better in many respects than what people endured in Europe.

Warnock Report (1978)

Not surprisingly, the SPG campaign of education for conversion engendered relatively little interest on the part of Native Americans, who generally found the religious content of the SPG schools to be irrelevant to their interests. Perhaps the biggest problem, however, was the failure of the SPG to consider its mission in terms of an educational exchange between cultures. It was like I imagine Oxford or Cambridge to be — the old dons and fellows.
