Lovejoy, a rogue antiques dealer with a circle of friends who combine to help and hinder, is the type of character I'd like to create--witty and crass, full of interesting quirks, yet also a sense of morality. I like to think of it as if Damon Runyon had been born British, with the first-person narrative flowing serenely over the dangerous mob happenings below.

Lovejoy: Paid and Loving Eyes, The Great California Game & The Lies of Fair Ladies by Jonathan Gash

He has some amusing observations, but it's not enough to save these books. The inimitable Lovejoy seen in Jade Woman, still on the run from British authorities, has arrived in New York as an illegal immigrant--and he loves Manhattan.

For impenetrable reasons innocents are killed in the pursuit of some weird plot to take over the world of antiques. The best two in this book are Magda and her great fiddles in the US of A. For whatever reason, The Last Gambado followed it, which chronologically takes place after this atrocity.
