Secret World War II treasure worth billions 'found in Philippines cave'

San José The San José is considered to be the richest treasure ships ever lost in the Western Hemisphere. It was reported that the ship was returning from a voyage that had started from Honduras, bringing goods from the southern hemisphere to the northern hemisphere, and was expected to be arriving in the city of Newport.

Later in the evening, the Blumer sent radio signals to the København, but to no avail. On one of its voyages, the København left from Nørresundby to sail to Buenos Aires to drop off commissioned cargo containing cement mixtures and chalk. The first sighting of his ship, after his radio communications had ceased, was reported on January 26th 2009.
