Yet just as he had done with the West report, Creighton produced fact after fact supporting his version of the events which I, for one, found far more convincing than the vague accusations being made by Gary Murray.

They refused permission at that time, but in July 1997 a newspaper report said that they had changed their minds and that a DNA test would take place. Hanne says he asked her to marry him in 1984 but she declined because her family had Jewish antecedents and she thought that Bormann's Broderick-Hartley's racist prejudices would undermine such a marriage.

Shulman's was a wide-ranging career as a journalist and writer. I must confess that even though Creighton went along with the Broderick-Hartley deception, I always felt, when we discussed it, that he had reservations which he would not reveal to me.

Rather surprising at this stage in the saga was. With him was a girl interpreter. They merely could not believe the entire story - facts or no facts - and Grafton had decided that similar unsubstantiated negative attitudes would dominate most of the critical reviews of the book and they were not prepared to face that kind of media hostility.
