But without sound legitimate grounds, yes, first come first serve. Turning 'afraid Of love' could well be her fear of the physical act of sex - particularly understandable if she was as young as many nineteenth century rural brides. Third parties can make the same assertion about Amy in any of these ways.

Sex

Many men found the idea of women making their own way in the world both sensible and desirable, while many women — the novelist Mary Augusta Ward, who wrote under her married name Mrs Humphry Ward, being a notable example — were passionately against female emancipation and the threat it posed to the status quo of marriage and motherhood.
