Soundarya Lahari Trust

Oh Goddess , who is the consort of Lord Shiva, Your sweet voice which resembles, The continuous waves of nectar, Fills the ear vessels of Saraswathi, Without break, And she shakes her head hither and thither, And the sound made by her ear studs, Appear as if they applaud your words. || 49 || The look from your eyes, Oh goddess Is all pervasive, Does good to every one, Sparkles everywhere, Is a beauty that can never be challenged, Even by blue lily flowers, Is the source of rain of mercy, Is sweetness personified, Is long and pretty, Is capable of saving devotees, Is in the several cities as its victory. Jyothi having received the knowledge from two great masters, presents this wisdom in gradual and graded manner for participants to grasp and prepare themselves for higher wisdom.

Soundarya Lahari

|| 81 || Oh, daughter of the mountain, Perhaps Himavan, the king of mountains, Gave readily as dowry to you, The density and breadth from his bottom, So that your behinds are broad and dense.

Soundarya Lahari

And adorned with slightly parted smile, Showing the tiers of your teeth, Which are like the white tendrils, And which are sweetly scented. The learned men seem to see a line, Which is in the shape of a small wave of the river Yamuna, And which shines and glitters, and appears like the sky, Made very thin by the dense colliding breasts, Entering your cave-like navel.

Sadhana Sangama Trust

Oh, She who is refuge to all this world, All gods except you mother, Give refuge and grants wishes, Only by their hand. It is also for sure, That the Goddess Lakshmi, Enters the blooming blue Lilly flowers, Before your eyes close at night, And reenter in the morn when they open.
