German forces attacked Krasnogvardeysk from three directions. The secret of this blank is that during the war most of these men were patriots, and discontinued their revolutionary work. Voroshilov was appointed People's Commissar Minister for Defence in 1934 and a Marshal of the Soviet Union in 1935.

During the war, the Soviets found it difficult to deal with the concrete bunkers used by the Finns and a request was made for a tank with a large howitzer. This reorganization was conceived by Kulik but put into practice by Voroshilov. He found work as a turner and became active in politics.

As Political Commissar serving co-equally with Stalin, Voroshilov was responsible for the morale of the 1st Cavalry Army, which was composed chiefly of peasants from southern Russia. This culminated in the KV-1 model 1942 German designation KV-1C, which had very heavy armour, but lacked a corresponding improvement to the engine. The 122 mm D-25T used a separate shell and powder charge, resulting in a lower rate of fire and reduced ammunition capacity.
