Plotinus, using a venerable analogy that would become crucial for the largely neoplatonic metaphysics of developed Christian thought, likens the One to the which emanates light indiscriminately without thereby diminishing itself, or reflection in a mirror which in no way diminishes or otherwise alters the object being reflected. He wrote the On Abstinence from Animal Food Περὶ ἀποχρῆς ἐμψύχων; De Abstinentia ab Esu Animalium, advocating against the consumption of animals, and he is cited with approval in vegetarian literature up to the present day.

The Enneads of Plotinus: Porphyry: On the Life of Plotinus and the Arrangement of his Work

He does, however, claim the stars and planets are , as witnessed by their. Nous as being: being and perception intellect manifest what is called soul. Plotinus and the Enneads; Plotinus versus Gnostics

He says: 'And send them at your convenience or, better, bring them; for I can never cease urging you to give the road towards us the preference over any other.

Porphyry (filosof)

He obviously considered Gnosticism an extremely dangerous influence, likely to pervert the minds even of members of his own circle. Postmodernism is more likely the tactic of closure.
