John Evelyn, the 17th-century diarist whose Restoration diary is recognised as the most extensive and informative record of a momentous period, even advised Samuel Pepys on libraries.

Instructions concerning erecting of a library, 1661. Translated by John Evelyn Between 1646 and 1648 a new wing of the Palais Mazarin was constructed by Pierre Le Muet and Maurizio Valperga along the Rue Richelieu. By introducing it to England in 1661, Evelyn, too, blazed a trail.

A history of reading

An errata leaf was inserted in a later issue, because the translator was much exercised by the misprints; as he told his fellow diarist, Samuel Pepys, Evelyn even tried to suppress the edition, which may account for the book's rarity today.

EVELYN, John translator -- NAUDÉ, Gabriel 1600-1653. Unlike Evelyn, Gabriel Naudé 1600—53 studied medicine in Paris before becoming a professional librarian: first, for Henri de Mesmes, a statesman, bibliophile, and friend of Montaigne, and then in turn for the cardinals di Bagni, Barberini, Richelieu and Mazarin, and finally, for the Queen of Sweden.
