A7, recounts the experiences of David Rosenberg.

Emigration and Immigration

Since large numbers of Soviet Jews have left over the last decade, the Soviet government can often ask that letters of invitation come from first—degree relatives; however, since many of those emigrants are not living in Israel, and only Israeli—based letters of invitation are acceptable, the Soviet government is declining to consider such letters from relatives who are of more distant consanguinity than would be the case if Soviet Jewish emigrants had, in fact, gone to Israel. Lerner died in 1981 at the age of 65 and the officials denied permission for her body to leave the country for burial in Israel.
