Canada

The Ryerson Image Centre dates back to the 1969, although the building was not completed until 2012, after the university was gifted 292,000 photographs of the collection. In February 2012, the city moved to permanently close Gould Street to car traffic, from O'Keefe Lane to Bond Street; with the closed pedestrian-only portions of Gould Street designated as Ryerson Square. In 2019, Ryerson submitted a rezoning application for a 41-storey tower at 202 Jarvis Street, which will include an 11-storey academic base with classrooms, labs, and research space intended for the Faculty of Science, along with a student residence in its upper levels.

The university is a institution, with approximately 44,400 undergraduates and 2,950 graduate students enrolled there during the 2019—20 academic year. Ryerson University stated that the statue will not be restored or replaced.

POLYTECHNICAL ~ Toronto

The Ryersonian Review of Journalism was established by the School of Journalism in 1984 and probes the quality of journalism in Canada. During the war, Kerr was also the site's director prior to becoming the director of the Training and Re-Establishment Institute.
