During the 1890s he lived with his family at Barkston, his father being a railway platelayer. But more was accomplished than was realized.

Special Report: The Railways

The cross is in the Down goods yard and a little closer to the station. Arbitration with landlords proved costly, but at last the engineers began on the gap of 136 miles between Annesley and London, which, after heavy engineering works, was bridged. A mine of fascinating information, and an indispensable reference for narrow gauge research.
