Bakanichev was not alone among former POWs in expressing his moral opposition and even taking action against the camp regime. They did not think about what hid behind the words 'we are still pressing forward, clearing from the path any and all obstacles. After escaping in the spring of 1945, Bakanichev chose to repatriate to the Soviet Union and attempted to resume his academic studies.

After being surrounded and captured during Operation Barbarossa, he endured almost four years of hunger and forced labor in a series of POW and labor camps, including Steyerberg and Bomlitz.
