Florida Forest Service

Other factors such as how often the site burns or is affected by storms can also influence the species composition on a particular site.

Garden Guides

One might think that the shapes of leaves for a given tree species would be constant but in fact the leaves of some tree species can vary considerably Figure 11. Since I rarely do this in winter, I find its descriptions and pictures quite helpful in sorting out the deciduous trees. All growth between the end of the twig and its nearest terminal bud scar is new growth.
