Creighton's Collection of Harp (and some other) Music

The title fable 19 has two donkeys tied to each other at a rest period learning to eat together out of first one and then the other's feed — instead of straining against each other and getting nothing.

Maritime Folk Songs: from the Collection of Helen Creighton

The final two pages here are shortened to one. Does no one look at these print-upon-demand publications after a machine has garbled them up? The story goes through the cricket's week. The fox at first asks for a bite of the cheese.

Books & Reading

This book comes with a special front cover on which some of the writing and characters are raised above the level of the rest. See the collection for details about each story.

Other Books

Her second collection of harp music, this book contains compositions and arrangements selected from Corrinas back catalogue of works for solo harp, from 1998 to 2019. The fox wears human clothes, including suspenders, jeans, and sneakers. Helen Creighton collected maritime songs remembered by an older generation of Canadians, mainly from Nova Scotia, between 1928 and 1954.

The little mouse is particularly curious, and thus he ventures into the lion's cave, where he is promptly caught. Those charming beacons, perched atop cliffs, wrapped in red and white stripes, beaming out into the wild and wonderful wide-open sea for all the ships to see. At its heart, the book has a page for each of the eight La Fontaine texts and a dramatic illustration page facing that.
