Brodsky's elegies — the bear who played the flute

And the world is at least half terrible.

Erotica Romana, by Johann Wolfgang Goethe

That gives me a slight sensation. Soothe my sad brows with Bacchus' gift divine, Nor wake me while my hapless passions rest! There in soft shadow of some ancient tree, Maidens, boys, and wine-cups be, Scattered on the pleasant grass; From lip to lip the cups they pass; Their own mantles garland-bound Hang o'er-head for canopy, And every cup with rose is crowned; Each at banquet buildeth high Of turf the table, and of turf the bed,— Such was ancient revelry! While sounds of war thy fearful slumbers spoil, And far-off trumpets scare! We realise flowering and fading together. You know, I went back to our email exchanges, back when this was happening.

The Art of Love (1965)

This painting can be viewed at The Metropolitan Museum of Art. And yet in the warm waking creature is the care and burden of a great sadness. For mutability Is woman's soul.

The Art of Love by Ovid

We, though, while we are intent on one thing, wholly, feel the loss of some other. I shame not to declare it is my mood To sicken of a life such sorrows smite.

The Project Gutenberg eBook of The Elegies of Tibullus, By Theodore C. Williams.

Only those who died young, in their first state of timeless equanimity, that of being weaned, follow her lovingly.
