Parthenogenesis is asexual reproduction via the female only, there appears to have been no male Darwinula's for many thousands if not millions of years! Carapace length and height of every stage were measured under the microscope Nikon SME 1500 equipped with NIS-Element BR 3. The Class Ostracoda is separated from other Crustacea by their laterally compressed body, undifferentiated head, seven or less thoracic limbs and the bivalved, perforate carapace lacking growth lines. Results reveal that this species possesses a special growth pattern with the maximum size increase occurring at the transition from the instars A-5 to A-4.

Those found on coarser substrates in higher energy environments tend to have more robust heavily ribbed or reticulated carapaces.
