Through the analysis of several European Court of Justice ECJ judgments, this essay argues that jurists need a third progressive approach - one that attempts to take into account both the uneven distributive impact of harmonization in a multi-level system of governance and the distributive consequences of harmonized private law rules. In addition to affordable housing production, a mainstay in the field, microenterprise and nonprofit business ventures have become economic growth stimulants. The deindustrialization of the 1970s and 1980s intensified public antipoverty and social welfare efforts, and community organizations became the major vehicles for delivery of housing and job programs in low-income communities.
