Sintering of aluminium and its alloys

In addition to the process improvements, co-location of the recycling plant with an existing production facility dramatically reduces trucking needs, leading to a cut in transportation related energy use of about 90 percent. An item that has been used previously. By alloying and proper thermal and mechanical treatment, however, it can be made much harder and stronger, with tensile strengths as high as 700 megapascals.

Alcoa Wheels

Alcoa has one of the most optimally-running aluminum smelting and innovative cast products networks globally, all while utilizing a flexible energy portfolio. Upon melting, the solid metal expands about 7 percent in volume, the solidification shrinkage being 6. Alcoa's new recycling facility is the first of its kind in North America.
