29 Best Restaurants in Paris

Russell Norman, owner of , a Venetian restaurant in London's Soho Ca' d'Oro-alla Vedova, Venice Venice is full of drinking dens and restaurants which look like they might have been there for centuries — low beams laden with copper pots, dim clinking of glasses and cutlery, old sea-dog clientele — but which in fact only materialised in the past 10 years or so. I have lived there with my wife for a few years and quite simply fell in love with the city, culture and the people.

The 13 Best Restaurants in Paris

Perfectly suited to wine connoisseurs, the gourmand menu pairs each course with an appropriate vintage; the crisp white Burgundy is particularly satisfying with oily fish dishes. Their father opened the place in 1936, and judging by the state of some of the posters around the walls, nothing much has changed.

Some Of The Most Famous Restaurants In Paris

Sostanza is famous for a miraculous spun omelette with artichokes which arrives at the table looking like a meringue nest, and for a dish of two roasted chicken breasts in a pan frothing over with butter. Raw tuna is flash-fried in sesame seeds and served with a Thai sauce, making for a refreshing starter; crispy-coated deep-fried king prawns have a similar oriental lightness. Dine in Options 25 Grand River St.

The 11 Oldest Restaurants in Paris

Jane Birkin used to lunch here, as did Marc Chagall, Henri Matisse and James Joyce.

5 Must

Their homemade foie gras terrine is the ultimate gem to try, but there is gastronomic excellence in almost every dish. Madeleine Hate on it all you want, but one of the only reasons Instagram is full of photos of rainbow-colored macarons is because this place helped make them trendy. .
