Urban Planning in Islamabad: From the Modern Movement to the Contemporary Urban Development Between Formal and Informal Settlements

In the 10th and 11th centuries, though, there appears to have been a general improvement in the political stability and economy.

Modernism in Urban Planning

Alonso was a student of Walter Isard at Penn's regional science program. In addition to these aspects, this study will focus the attention on the spreading of contemporary formal and informal settlements that are nowadays supposed to be in a critical point; past and actual planning policy and the differences of urban growing in strict planning city like Islamabad and in the more organic old city of Rawalpindi identify two different characters in occupying the free soil and reshaping the city in its physical qualities and social strata. The settlers of the new towns generally were attracted by fiscal, economic, and juridical advantages granted by the founding lord, or were forced to move from elsewhere from his estates.
