The Asian labor force is projected to grow by 0. The participation of the private sector contributes to effective cost containment through the profit motive, improves efficiency and leads to more sustainable jobs through more ambitious skills transfer initiatives.

The Effects of Rapid Population Growth on Labor Supply and Employment in Developing Countries on JSTOR

Following this, the South African Government remains hopeful in the sense that an effective implementation of NDP will put the South African economy in a positive recovery direction till 2030. Opportunities and disruptions arising in the employment sector can be addressed through development strategies for regions which are in different stages of industrial development. Second, if gender inequalities in labour markets are to be rectified, society as a whole has to seek specific means of both progressing toward a better balance between the provision of unpaid reproductive work and paid labour, and facilitating greater gender equality in both domains.

Structural change and economic growth in India

The discussion of labor demand focuses on the factors that condition labor absorption capacity. Infrastructure investment projects may provide a means whereby a consistent real return over inflation can be attained through a low volatility investment vehicle. These elements of digital economy should be incorporated into the development strategies with focus on appropriate policies for investments, education and training, social security, and trade facilitation.

François Groepe: South Africa's structural unemployment challenge

The degree of substitutability is still uncertain but countries attracting investments in labour intensive industries must continuously upgrade the skills of work force for better absorption in the workplace.
