Wincanton

This was in the pamphlet Architecture Number 30, trying to locate infrastructure relative to landscape and urbanism in a kind of Klein field diagram, and offering that this actually opened up other possible interpretations of the spatial products that include productive surface, a civic conduit, or a programmed container, arguing in a way that architecture was not within that field because it could be atomized at the periphery. And at the same time that one right shift the conception of the Salton from a refuse where this is the engine of the region and imagine a redistribution in which the Salton becomes again an active economic as well as ecological agent.
