Faust: A Tragedy by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe

This is a re-read for me since I read excerpts of the first act in college.

Faust: A Tragedy, Part One

Thus we, our hellish boluses compounding, Among these vales and hills surrounding, Worse than the pestilence, have passed. Unto a neighbor she must go, And meanwhile thou, alone, mayst glow With every hope of future pleasure, Breathing her atmosphere in fullest measure.

Faust: A Tragedy, Part 1 by Bayard Taylor

One within is prisoned there! But this real Faust becomes enamoured of a phantom Helen; and of this monstrous embrace an ideal poetic child, incarnating, we presume, the contrary beauties of the Classical and the Romantic schools, is the product. He suspects, however, that his attempts are failing.

Faust : a tragedy : interpretive notes, contexts, modern criticism

He has taken a great German work, until now all but inaccessible to English readers, and made it into a sparkling English poem, full of verve and wit. Another We'll surely find him by those poplars yonder. Later by Schubert based on Faust: , , and.
