Group Portrait with Lady (The Essential Heinrich Böll)

The story itself primarily has to do with members of German society, high and low, as they cope with the advance of American and Russian troops toward the close of World War II inside Germany.

Group Portrait with Lady by Heinrich Böll

This wrapping of the structure of the novel turns within itself like a Mobius strip in writing. So for that much too we have to think of Leni and the other characters in the same way. So much so that I tend to discount straight-ahead narrative styles as mundane and seek out novelists engaged in stylistic innovation.

GROUP PORTRAIT WITH LADY. Translated from the German by Leila Vennewitz

The building she is in doesn't yield enough income, her roomers are foreign laborers, and despite the fact she has lived here all her life, that she's known the landlord for thirty years, that his grandson was her son's godfather when he was christened at the tail end of the war, times are changing and loyalties shift.

GROUP PORTRAIT WITH LADY. Translated from the German by Leila Vennewitz

Humane, funny, rich, poignant, full of irony and love and compassion.
