Norris, Frank: The Octopus

In other words, where California Dreaming becomes California Screaming? Griffith's 1909 film A Corner in Wheat, in which the magnate, after cornering the market in wheat, falls into a grain elevator and dies. I didn't care enough about these characters to wade through all the verbiage.

And yet I'm writing this on an Amazon owned website. Annixter an Not just a great American novel-- this book is THE great American novel, in its scope, its understanding of the American character and of the forces which have shaped the American civilization. Presley, the poet, throws a bomb made by the Communist bar-owner Caraher into Berman's home, but Berman escapes unscathed.

They fight the railway by means of clean politics, dirty politics, and ultimately through violence. A charitable interpretation is that he thinks these word-for-word repetitions are leitmotifs or Homeric epithets something, but they, in fact, are just plain corny and good occasions to skip a page. Lyman, violating his promise to the league, declines to reduce tariffs for Tulare County wheat.

The Octopus : A Story of California by Frank Norris

Thus begins the war between the farmers and railroad trust. Norris does the same with his novel: it is a story about wrongs against humanity and he wrote it for the masses.
