Duke of Norfolk

Still he trusted to persuasion rather than force, and wrote to telling him that Mary was too securely guarded to be rescued, and bidding him defer a rising. His eldest son succeeded his first cousin twice removed downwards as fifth Viscount Hereford in 1646. The other was to Elizabeth I herself, declaring his loyalty to the crown.

Being Bess: On This Day in Elizabethan History: The Execution of Thomas Howard, 4th Duke of Norfolk in 1572.

When the time came for diplomacy was despatched for the purpose, and the treaty of Edinburgh released Norfolk in August from duties which he half-heartedly performed. From this point to the present, the title has remained in the hands of the descendants of John Howard. Norfolk was found guilty of conspiring to marry without his sovereign's permission, and instigating and arranging a plot to enlist Spain to invade England and place Mary Stuart on the throne.
