Kaigaku

After the attack the Japanese increased the Korean police presence in the region from 12,000 to 20,000 members. Other than that, everything else feels like its just kinda left out there hanging and even the things that are getting conclusions feel very abrupt.

Kaikaku

However, he was still being attuned to his newfound Demon abilities at the time of his death. He mainly infuses electricity with his swordsmanship to enhance the power of his attacks and to make up for his inability to perform its simplest technique: First Form: Thunderclap and Flash. Students take part in official ceremonies, pledge their determination and hopes for the new year to the school and to themselves, and work out together in a large group with other students and teachers.

Daiyō kangoku

He lost the fight by split decision.

Kang Kyung

So if he planned it to end it exactly like this, then that's almost as disappointing as learning he was forced to end it by his publisher. Like what about Gakuto's relationship with the slut and the student council girl? When confronted with a stronger opponent, Kaigaku quickly surrendered. But it's more of a sudden unexpected change that didn't get explained satisfyingly rather than an ongoing arc ending suddenly.
