Louis Bachelier (1870)

In modern terminology, Brownian motion was characterized as: a a process with independent homogeneous increments whose paths are continuous, b the continuous time process which is the limit of symmetric random walks, and c the Markov process whose forward Kolmogorov equation is the heat equation. In this course he may have drawn out the similarities between the diffusion of probability the total probability of one being conserved and the diffusion equation of Fourier the total heat-energy being conserved. With the support of the Council of the , Bachelier was given a permanent professorship at the Sorbonne, but intervened and Bachelier was drafted into the French army as a private.
