Drei Dithyramben

Hollingdale is impressively accurate, but he is more intent on the semantic content of the verse than its poetic form.

Dithyramps

I have seen many lands, my nose has learned to test and assess many kinds of air: but with you my nostrils taste their greatest delight! Its roots shoot down, where The rock itself tremors Gazing into the depths It tarries at abysses, Where everything around Tends to fall: Amid the impatience Of the rough boulders and torrential streams Patiently enduring, firm, silent, Solitary.
