On the source of the royal-size sheets employed for the edition, the long-standing opinion, going back to the Nineteenth century, is that they were made at Caselle, near Turin in Piedmont, and brought to Mainz by mule-train over the Alps and by barge down the Rhine. Instead, it often depends on variant wordings between editions and on inconsistencies in the naming of characters, among other features that are likely to 98 Notes to pp. Observations on Paper as Evidence University of Kansas Publications, Library Series, no.
