Gender and Structures of Constraint. We are, after all, all dependent on each other—and men particularly so regarding the care work that women provide.

Women and the Gift Economy

Herds were not a unique kind of property that caused patriarchy, rather it was the fact that now society was producing a surplus that allowed for the institution of private property to develop. Much ideological confusion arises from the fact that the economic structures of exchange and gift giving taken together are also the structure of a parasitic relation in which one economy gives to the other, while the other economy actively takes from it. School, however, can also be a place of social conditioning that unintentionally perpetuates marginalizing conditions for the same students it wishes to liberate.
