ADW: Alethe choloensis: INFORMATION

Project Aletheia is born out of a mutual sense that science can be enhanced by collaboration with practitioners, and conversely, that practice can be enhanced by collaboration with scientists. It is likely that populations of cholo alethes have been shrinking with the reduction and fragmentation of tropical montane forests in Africa, as the extent of these forests has continued to shrink since the last glacial maxima, approximately 20,000 years ago. At least for the time being, those populations are not currently threatened with high levels of deforestation.
