POLICY AND PLANNING

These cri- teria appear rather straightforward, yet a number of ques- tions arise: How can the gendered distribution of power and influence in the sector be evaluated? The study also shows that gender differences are affected by socioeconomic and demographic status. They are to stand for conti- nuity and a long-term perspective in transport policy. The reports often simply equate âgender equalityâ with âwomenâ and limit differences between women and men to those that can be quantified.

POLICY AND PLANNING

However, these traditional planning practices often fail to uncover the attitudes that drive decision making, much less design services in a way so that these decision- making âhot buttonsâ are hit.
