

Forty years in Washington

Little, Brown, and Company - Forty years in Washington

...citizens, who crowded in the streets, who saw some citizens thronged to the President's House. Here the arrangements were the same as on the Fourth of July. Congress being in session, the company of course was more numerous and interesting, strangers of distinction from all parts of the Union at this season resorted to the seat of government; even our savage brethren from the woods and wilds of the Far west. On one occasion described by Sir A. Foster in his "Notices of the U. S." he seems to think the President failed in paying due respect to the gentlemen of the diplomatic corps. "The President took care to show his preference on New Year's day, by giving us, (the diplomatic corps) only a bow, while with them he entered into a long conversation." (Foster's Notes on U. S.).

It really may have been so, and not only the President but the whole assembled company may have participated in this neglect, so lively was the interest and the curiosity excited by the appearance of the Ouzig-Chiefs and their attendant spouses. And likewise of the Tunisian Minister, Meley Meley, and his splendid and numerous suite! It must be confessed that in their polished hands, their bearded faces, their Turkish...
