Mourning Dove Hunting in Alabama

More than 98 percent of the mourning doves banded in Alabama during the months of July and August each year are resident doves that do not migrate. The chores of nest building are shared.

Superstitions and Transitions

When planting in rows or with a drill, alternate rows ofÂ planted and nonplanted areas.

Hunters asked to report mourning dove bands

The Fish and Wildlife Service will not make a distinction between agricultural fields planted with the intent to gather a crop and those planted without such intent provided the planting is carried out in a manner consistent with the recommendations of State Extension Specialists. These dens should measureÂ 10x10x20 inches with a 2 Â³-inch diameter opening onÂ the side. All hunters are encouraged to wear eye protection and earplugs.

Alabama dove seasons not far off

Duck managementÂ areas must have water control devices to allow drainageÂ before the growing season so food plants can germinateÂ and grow during the summer months before these areasÂ are reflooded just before the hunting season, usuallyÂ the latter part of October. Â Wood ducks are the most abundant duck species thatÂ nests in Alabama. AUTHOR: Jeff Makemson, Wildlife Biologist, Division of Wildlife and Freshwater Fisheries.

Mourning Dove Biology & Management in Alabama

Even daily movements of nonmigrating mourning doves may be extensive.
