Introducing tablet computers to a rural primary school: An Activity Theory case study

Current Approaches to Moral Education The overwhelming percentage of efforts within public education to address the moral domain currently march under the flag of character education. Unfortunately, teachers fail to increase their use of more productive techniques, such as discussions, rewards for good behavior and involvement in decision-making. The project to introduce tablets was a personal initiative of the head teacher who needed to convince the Ministry of Education, her staff and parents of the pupils.
