Central Asia

Cooperation also touches upon issues such as addressing the root causes and the prevention of irregular migration, trafficking in human beings, return and readmission, legal migration and border management. There is much riding on our efforts, and a lot of hard work lies ahead of us. This exchange will build on the ASEAN Rural Connectivity Conference held in September 2011 in Hanoi, which convened government and private sector to highlight technologies and financing mechanisms that are available to expand ICT services to rural areas in ASEAN, particularly in the Mekong region.

Transboundary water management in Central Asia

In a comprehensive project, EC IFAS and the five states as well as GIZ, UNECE and representatives of other international partners collectively devised a scheme to improve water management across the Aral Sea Basin — the Third Aral Sea Basin Programme — which has been approved by all five states. This report is excellent and summarizes our work examining the challenges facing the Mekong River basin and its ties to the economies, livelihoods, and culture of nearly 70 million people.

Transboundary water management in Central Asia

The situation is exacerbated by severe over-exploitation of the available water resources and the effects of global climate change. Two Centers of Excellence are based in Thailand providing technical assistance in drug quality assurance and related activities such as an inventory of legitimate producers of quality anti-infection drugs in the region and training on product manufacturing standards.

Opening Remarks at the Indo

Approach The GIZ programme is active in each of the five Central Asian states. These initiatives include building a regional network of women leaders in government and civil society to address critical transnational issues such as environmental resources management; strengthening ties between elected women leaders in Cambodia; funding scholarships for aspiring women engineers; and funding opportunities for female scientists in Lower Mekong countries to collaborate with U.

Lower Mekong Initiative

In the Joint Declaration, serving as a common political framework, the participating states agreed to strengthen co-operation in migration management, to explore and develop agreed principles and elements for close migration partnerships between their countries, following a comprehensive, balanced, pragmatic and operational approach, and respecting the rights and human dignity of migrants and their family members, as well as of refugees.

Opening Remarks at the Indo

The Enhanced Partnership and Cooperation Agreements EPCAs constitutes a new generation of bilateral agreements which elevate and deepen the current level of the EU-Central Asia partnership. The Alliance hosted a stakeholder consultation workshop with partners in Vietnam on July 12.
