The AAP conducting developmental surveillance at every health supervision visit and conducting general developmental screening using evidence-based tools at 9, 18, and 30 months, or whenever a concern is expressed.

Screening for Professionals

First of all, the child usually does not have the language skills to explain coherently what they are experiencing - rather they will communicate their problems through behavioral red flags, which, by their very nature, are non-specific.

Ongoing Assessment Tools Some ongoing assessment tools are aligned with specific curriculum, such as High Scope, Creative Curriculum and Project Construct. Evaluation and referral patterns among physicians have been shown to be inconsistent because of the barriers noted previously. An acceptable sensitivity for a developmental screening tool is 70% to 80%, and the accepted standard for specificity is approximately 80%.
