His groundbreaking fiction stories and sketches depicting Arab life in Ottoman Palestine were first published in 1906 under the pseudonym Hawaja Mussa Hebrew: חוג'יה מוסה, and collected in the volume Bene Arav, first published in Odessa in 1911. During the 1940s, Smilansky, for a similar reason, opposed the struggle against the British in Palestine. Smilansky's views, as reflected in many of his articles in the Hebrew press particularly in Haaretz, were close to those of Chaim Weizmann, and he was prominent in his activities towards peaceful coexistence with the Arabs.
