Art History Versus Aesthetics by James Elkins

Various philosophers have more recently classified works of art or at least some works of fine art as artifacts; examples include Marcia Eaton 1969 , Gary Iseminger 1973 , Denis Dutton 1979 , Risto Hilpinen 1992, 1993 , Thomasson 1999 , and Levinson 2007 for background, see the entry on artifacts. I was again reading the book On Creativity, because I was searching for the definition of some concepts.

Worse still was the mechanization of the creation process, which according to famous critic , meant the dehumanization of design.

Arts and Crafts Movement: Origins, History, Aesthetics

Finally, though there seems to be a distinction between aesthetic and artistic properties, what about the aesthetic properties of works of literature? How are works of art individuated? The relation between aesthetics and art history is partly institutional the two are divided in Western universities, although they are often mingled in Chinese and other Asian universities and partly philosophic because one attends to properties that are said to be universal, and the other attends to how those properties have been understood at different times and places.
