Zhou Enlai

Zhou's experiences after the May Fourth incident seem to have been crucial to his Communist career.

Furthermore, Deng received credit for enacting that Zhou initially proposed. Zhou also ordered a PLA battalion to guard the Forbidden City and protect its traditional artifacts from vandalism and destruction by Red Guards. He thus recruited numerous new Communist party members from cadet ranks, and eventually set up a covert Communist Party branch at the academy to direct the new members.

Prelude to Terror: Edwin P.

Arriving in Tokyo

Zhou accompanied the Whampoa cadets on the expedition as a political officer. In early 1930, Zhou began to disagree with the timing of Li Lisan's strategy of favoring rich peasants and concentrating military forces for attacks on urban centers.

China's Intervention in the Korean War Revisited

While running the liaison office, Zhou established the Yangtze Bureau of the Central Committee.
