EVIE O'NEILL, ZENITH, OHIO

Evie O'Neill pressed the sagging ice bag to her throbbing forehead and cursed the hour. It was noon, but it might as well be six in the morning for the pounding in her skull. For the past twenty minutes, her father had been beating his gums at her about last night's party at the Zenith Hotel. Her drinking had been mentioned several times, along with the unfortunate frolic in the town fountain. And the trouble that came between, of course. It was gonna be a real beast of a day, and how. Her head beat out requirements: Water. Aspirin. Please stop talking.

"Your mother and I do not approve of drinking. Have you not heard of the Eighteenth Amendment?"

"Prohibition? I drink to its health whenever I can."

"Evangeline Mary O'Neill!" her mother snapped.

"Your mother is secretary of the Zenith Women's Temperance Society. Did you think about that? Did you think about how it might look if her daughter were found carousing drunk in the streets?"

Evie slid her bruised eyeballs in her mother's direction. Her mother sat stiff-backed and thin-lipped, her long hair coiled at the nape of her neck. A pair of spectacles—"cheaters," the flappers called them—sat at the end of her nose. The Fitzgerald women were all petite, blue-eyed, blond, and hopelessly nearsighted.

"Well?" her father thundered. "Do you have something to say?"

The Diviners

Over many years, I have studied and practiced many healing modalities and have a background in dance, meditation, and yoga.

Diviners' Oak

After the Gospel, you will nowhere find either sophists, Chaldeans, enchanters, diviners, or magicians, except as clearly punished. It grew much warmer, unlocking its secrets for her.

She was just so intriguing because while she was the image of a typical high-spirited flapper, we also got glimpses of her sensitive side and saw that she was actually a very intelligent, yet afflicted girl.

Diviners' Oak

The slaves of West Africa and the Caribbean, stripped of all they had, still carried with them their customs and beliefs. Jordan, regaled the chuckling women in the shop. Motorcars swerved around the throngs of people and one another with the furious grace of a corps de ballet.

The Diviners (Diviners Series #1) by Libba Bray, Paperback

That pretty chambermaid... L... El... Ella! It consists of two wood or bamboo blocks cut into the shape of a crescent moon. Irrepressible 17-year-old Evie delights in her banishment to her Uncle Will's care in Manhattan after she drunkenly embarrasses a peer in her Ohio hometown.
