Current applications: Corby

They observed that the grant of an injunction would put an end to the first defendant's business on the site, which would no doubt have an impact on his livelihood.

Current applications: Corby

But nor is the court obliged to grant an injunction because a local authority considers it necessary or expedient for a breach of planning control to be restrained by injunction. There was a single issue.

Oakley v South Cambridgeshire District Council & Anor

As for road safety, the highway authority was concerned about the creation and use of random and irregular accesses off the main arterial routes within the county, the A1307 road being one of them.

Ex parte Cunningham was such a case, because the Court could evaluate for itself the discrepancy between the compensation awarded to Mr Cunningham by the board, and the compensation he would have received in an Industrial Tribunal. In the result, the first defendant was prosecuted for his failure to comply. The second report updated the committee, stating that activities on the land continued at an increased level: 'This relatively recent and now sustained intensification of the use of the land in breach of planning control has heightened the need for the land to be brought under proper planning control'.

Planning

In August 2018, the Inspectors that conducted the examination issued their.

In October 2013, additions to area C included the rear part of a lorry, used for storing household furniture, a fuel tank and a dismantled Nissen hut. It is worth noting, in that context, that in 2012 the first defendant received a fixed penalty notice from Cambridgeshire County Council in 2012 in respect of the sale of cars from the cycle path immediately in front of the Hill Trees land. The history of the first defendant's failures of compliance with planning controls goes back to his occupation in 2000 of area D, the land behind areas A to B.
