Building the Navy's Bases, vol. I (part I)

While the report is essentially a record of the work accomplished by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, the Corps of Engineers, the Construction Battalions -- popularly known as the 'Seabees' --, and the many civilian employees, engineering firms and contractors associated with the Bureau's program in furtherance of this country's war effort, endeavor has been made to correlate these activities with the broad sequence of events and with the policies and decisions which were the basis for each successive course of action. After prolonged negotiations between the Navy Department and the Bureau of the Budget, a plan was worked out whereby an independent civilian committee was established within the Secretary's office to review and screen all public works before they were presented to the Secretary for approval.

The location of the 2nd Battalion, 8th Cavalry, is important because this site helps to establish the exact position of the 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry, on the night of July 25 and the early morning hours of the July 26. That the German army was no exception to this rule is proved not only by many Belgian witnesses but by the most irrefragable kind of evidence, the admission of German soldiers themselves recorded in their war diaries. A man has reported that he had been shot at out of our house; no wonder, if he does not give the countersign.

If, after the Public Works budget has been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, it becomes necessary to effect reductions, a reconsideration of the most effective distribution of available funds would be in order. Example of this work were the floating drydocks, pontoons, portable housing, portable power plants, stills for producing fresh water from sea water, and other equipment which made possible the rapid advance of our forces into the western Pacific. Eighth Army's daily PIR covered the period from midnight to midnight.
