The essays take us into the realm of Proustian language—as quotation, metaphor, and memory—and into art history and musical ideology, connecting the art of words with the words of art. In Search of Lost Time is considered the major work of French fiction of the 20th century. In January 1909 occurred the real-life incident of an involuntary revival of a childhood memory through the taste of tea and a rusk biscuit which in his novel became madeleine cake ; in May the characters of his novel invaded his essay; and in July of this crucial year he began À la recherche du temps perdu.

In Search of Lost Time

Focusing on Stendhal, Gérard de Nerval, George Sand, Émile Zola, and Marcel Proust, Bray's book explores the ways that these writers represent and negotiate the relationship between the self and the world as a function of space in a novel turned map. They describe captivity, then escape; uneasy dominion, then conflicted bereavement; the flow and ebb of sexual possession.

Marveling at the random connections between present and past and at the involuntary nature of memory, he sets out to describe his reminiscences of Combray.
