Young children can acknowledge physical death but consider it a temporary or gradual event, reversible and not final like leaving and returning, or a game of peek-a-boo. Normal or common grief appears to occur in 50% to 85% of persons after they have experienced a loss. People with lower levels of education, those with neuroticism, or those undergoing a spiritual crisis are also more likely to be at risk of developing anticipatory grief.

Pharmacologic Treatment of Bereavement-Related Depression The clinical decision on whether to provide pharmacologic treatment for depressive symptoms in the context of bereavement is controversial and not extensively studied. In good all round condition. However, empirical results about the benefits of religion in coping with death tend to be mixed, some showing positive benefit and others showing no benefit or even greater distress among the religious.
