Vocational Interests and Career Efficacy Expectations in Relation to Occupational Sex

Results indicated that eighth grade boys and girls expressed stronger career interest in and higher self-efficacy for those occupations that they rated as employing more of their own gender. The vast majority of men, unless rich, godlike in looks, etc, will never experience anything remotely like this choice.

Vocational Interests: The Road Less Traveled — University of Illinois Urbana

The bulk of the research indicates that areas of interest, whether described by the Holland and Kuder classification systems, are stable, trait-like features within individuals. Vocational-interest measures routinely show correlations very near zero with measures of intellectual functions, even when the latter are aptitude measures presumably related to success in the relevant occupation. Historically, women were gatherers and men the hunters.
