Farm women were honored for sericulture, spinning, weaving, and needlework, but never for laboring in the fields.

Nü zhi shu — Calisphere

Thus, in the village interviews it appears that if an activity generates some income, it is more likely to be seen as gongzuo. In an economy that celebrated workers in households, unattached hired workers—especially single men—were suspect and carefully screened.

Chao 1986 locates the shift from extensive to intensive farming in the Song period, identifying three of its most important characteristics: multiple cropping, reclamation of fallow lands, and intensified fertilization along with higher-yield strains and crops.

炎之花 (Yán zhī Huā)

This government policy was praised by contemporary scholars as highly beneficial.

Nü zhi shu — Calisphere

In Sweden and the former German Democratic Republic, for example, women were steered away from jobs with higher earnings and authority because of the assumption that they would temporarily leave their jobs or reduce their hours when they had children, as allowed by state policy Rosenfeld, Van Buren, and Kalleberg 1998; Trappe and Rosenfeld 1998. WORK LOCATION AND RETURNS Work for Pay outside the Home Industrialization brings an increase in formal wage jobs, with the timing and context of this increase related to characteristics of the labor force. This is reassuring from the standpoint of social survey applications.
