As can be seen, in the course of social development, society is moved by a range of different psychological motives. With regard to marital quality, two recent studies found that greater educational attainment was positively related to marital satisfaction ;. In a more extended evaluation of the Finnish study of 608 couples, found support for all of the hypothesized pathways in the FSM and also showed that economic pressure sometimes had direct as well as indirect effects on marital adjustment.

Whilst the energies are the motivating force, it is strategic ability and professional skills that turn energy into effective action. In this report, we use the term social class interchangeably with socioeconomic status SES as is typically done in quantitative analyses of class effects e. Simply put, there is some evidence from research during the past decade that supports the social selection assumption that individual characteristics from childhood and adolescence affect later SES and family relationships just as there is evidence consistent with the social causation assumption that SES plays a role in family dynamics and the life course development of family members.

Conclusion; Appendix; Acknowledgments; References; Chapter 5. Recommendation 4: Consideration of Genetic Variability There is growing evidence that environmental stress joins with certain genetic characteristics to affect individual adjustment e. During the next decade, it will be important to disaggregate these indicators of SES and examine their unique and combined roles in relation to family life.
